

The Seattle Times

Entertainment | Music

Kenny Chesney and Jason Aldean score at CenturyLink | Concert review

Country music hitmakers Jason Aldean and Kenny Chesney got co-billing at CenturyLink Field Saturday, June 27, but the 40,000-plus fans at the hard-driving show were clearly there for Chesney.

“When She Says Baby” showed just what a well-oiled machine Aldean’s band is and highlighted how good he is at picking out songs that can fill an arena or stadium. “Take A Little Ride (Night Train)” and his new single “Burning It Down” gave fans a couple more megahits to get crazy over.

As Aldean promised in his interview with The Seattle Times, he joined Chesney for an encore that included a couple of covers — “Hurts So Good” and “Summer of ’69.” When the pair changed the lyrics of Bryan Adams’ hit from “Those were the best days of my life” to “It was the best night of my life,” you couldn’t help but think everyone at the Clink was feeling the same way.