Want an exclusive backstage look at Dierks Bentley's Somewhere on a Beach tour?! Perfect, we got you covered.

E! News' Carissa Culiner gets a behind-the-scenes view of the country star's sold-out shows, and brought her selfie stick along to help share the experience with all of you. And if you're expecting a party, you'll get it.

Bentley admits that he barely gets any sleep each night, but it's all good, because he has an absolute blast on stage.

"It's crazy this is like our biggest set ever right? And I enter at the end of stage, surprise them, and there's just something about being hidden, you can hear them, see them, feel the energy going and it's like here we go. You're walking out into 15,000 people," he tells us.

"That general rush, nervousness, anxiousness, all those things you could possibly imagine multiply by 10 because it's crazy. It's such a good feeling, that's why I still do it. I have my kids and a great life at home and I hate being away from them, but the only reason why I am is I loved the live shows so much," Bentley adds.

"It's not about money or anything, it's about loving to play live music, it's the feeling of being on stage for two hours with my band and it's a feeling I can't get anywhere else. And I know once it's gone, I'm going to be chasing it for the rest of my life. So, I love every day and look forward to every show and playing like they're all the last one."

Watch the clip to get a glimpse of what goes down with Dierks, and if you want to catch a show, you're in luck, because they've extended the tour through the end of October! You find tickets here.
