

Kip Moore Puts on His Dancing Shoes in New Video for “Running For You”

REAL MEN . . . REAL COUNTRY MEN . . . DANCE.

Tammy Ragusa | Published: Feb 12, 2016

Kip Moore has just released the stunning new video for his single, “Running for You,” and if you watch closely, you’ll see that Kip has got some moves.

It’s the push/pull of love and romance as Kip and his leading lady execute the dance of love, sometimes figuratively and other times literally. Whether they are ultimately running towards or away from each other is up to the viewer’s interpretation, but the beautifully shot music video is riveting. The female lead is stunning and Kip is handsomely rugged, but props to director P.J. Brown who who shoots and edits the piece to appear beautifully choreographed. But at one point, it actually is when Kip joins his lady friend for a few steps in the dance studio.

It seems that more and more male country artists are showing they aren’t afraid to show off their moves, much to the enjoyment of their female fans. Luke Bryan has been doing it from the beginning and reaping the rewards of an appreciative audience, but before him, Trace Adkins was fearlessly swiveling his hips. Thomas Rhett and Jon Pardi have both proven a love of taking a spin on the dance floor, but recently, before an industry-only crowd at CRS, long and lanky Eric Paslay brought the audience to their feet with his skills, which included a little moonwalking.

Y'all get ready to get your groove on!

