HEAR TUCKER BEATHARD'S CRUNCHY NEW SONG 'BETTER THAN ME'

Track is performer's first release under new major label deal with Warner Music Nashville

Tucker Beathard was an independent artist when he released last year's Nobody's Everything, a record of co-written originals rooted in alt-rock's crunch and country-pop's gloss. Three months later, he's back with an anthemic single, "Better Than Me," as well as a new, high-powered partner: Warner Music Nashville.

With Warner's help, Beathard will make good on his original plan to release his debut album in two installments, following the nine-song Nobody's Everything with an equally sized second half sometime this spring. There's no concrete release date at the moment, but Beathard plans to whip up additional attention for the double album with a club tour that kicks off Friday night in Charlotte, North Carolina. The headlining trek runs through April, with expected highlights including "Rock On," his career-launching hit from 2016, as well as "Better Than Me," whose larger-than-life sweep nods to rock-influenced contemporaries like Kip Moore.

"I've always felt like there was something special about this song," says Beathard, who finished the breakup anthem with help from Dan Isbell and Jonathan Singleton. "I think it represents me really well as an artist, and the story behind it is something we can all relate to. I'm so glad it's finally getting the chance I've always felt like it deserves to be heard."
